DECLASSIFIED EXCISE EO 12356 10. F

100 million of the total issue of 200. Gene is on his way to Germany. He seems in fine health again, but says he expects to retire in 1963 when he reaches the age of 65. He has done a wonderful job with the World Bank and its affiliated organizations. He is one of the best companions and friends imaginable.

I lunched with Tom Lumley, his elder daughter, and his son at Prunier's. Afterwards, he took me to see the exhibition of royal gifts given in aid of the Young Women's Christian Association at Christie's. There were 272 items in this showing, many of them of great historical and artistic interest. The range of beautiful things was such as in a similar category could probably not be duplicated in another country. Most of them still belong to private owners. One of the earliest pieces, the authenticity of which is open to considerable doubt, is a shawl that allegedly belonged to William The Conqueror. It looked fragile, in spite of restoration.

Warren K. Olson, a member of the Atomic Energy Committee, came to see me this afternoon. I telephoned Washington to gather some information needed by Eugene Black, regarding the UN Bond issue.

We are about to start again on an attempt to settle the long delayed Holy Loch agreement. I spoke to Harold Caccia about this on the phone, since he had been active in the Washington talks on it. I want to see him soon to obtain his impressions on his trip around the world. The other night at the Wrights, he opened up on his experiences in Peking. His conversations there were interesting.
